Celebrating the lifesaving potential of type O-Negative blood donors and AB Plasma donors

Mighty Mia Receives Blood and Platelets During Leukemia Treatment

Just before her third birthday, Mia Dalton was diagnosed with high-risk B-Cell Acute Lymphoblastic Leukemia. Much of her treatment has taken place at The St. Jude Affiliate Clinic at Mercy Children's Hospital in Springfield, which is one of CBCO's partner hospitals. Mia has needed several blood and platelet transfusions, with many of them coming from generous CBCO donors.

The Dalton family, of Kirbyville, MO, celebrated Mia going into remission after just 30 days of treatment, but learned that she faced two years of chemotherapy to prevent the cancer from returning.

She just went through a rough patch in March due to liver problems. "The same chemo that saved her life, and will hopefully keep the cancer from coming back, is the same chemo that is destroying her organs," said Mia's mother, Jessica Dalton. This time, Mia spent three weeks in the hospital (her longest stretch has been six weeks and two days). She was even airlifted to St. Louis Children's Hospital because Springfield did not have a pediatric liver specialist.

More whole blood and platelet transfusions were necessary, both in Springfield and St. Louis, bringing Mia's current total to 19 blood transfusions and 25 platelet transfusions. Thankfully, March 11, 2017, was the last time she needed a transfusion.

March 24 was Mia's birthday, and things are going well for this four-year-old. The liver problems are currently under control and she has returned home from the hospital. Now she is in maintenance, continuing oral chemotherapy, taking on physical therapy, and preparing for preschool. Her family anticipates treatment ending around July 2018.

"People don't realize that she depends on those donations to survive," said Jessica. "She would have died without them."

Thank you, CBCO donors! Time that you spent giving blood and platelets has given this little girl a chance. To stay updated on Mia's progress, click HERE to visit Mighty Mia's Big Adventure on Facebook.
